4. There was extensive discussion about the history of violations and environmental injustices related to the medical waste facility in South Baltimore.
5. Past incidents, such as illegal waste importation, bankruptcy filings due to pollution charges, and violations of emissions standards, were cited as evidence of ongoing environmental harm.
6. The community's advocacy efforts and resilience in documenting pollution incidents and pushing for accountability were highlighted as key factors in addressing these injustices.
7. Representatives from city agencies, including the Department of Public Works and the Baltimore City Health Department, clarified their limited roles in regulating and monitoring air quality and waste management facilities.
8. The hearing highlighted the importance of community monitoring efforts in documenting pollution incidents and holding polluters accountable.
9. Dr. Chris Heeney from Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health presented data analysis of pollution incidents captured through community monitoring using trail cameras.
10. The findings, including the frequency and duration of pollution events, underscored the need for greater transparency, regulatory oversight, and action to address environmental injustices and protect public health in affected communities.

For the purpose of inviting representatives from the Department of Public Works, the Baltimore Health Department, Baltimore City hospitals, institutions that make use of medical waste incinerators in Baltimore City, and any other relevant stakeholders to discuss: (1) which local hospitals send waste to medical incinerators in Baltimore City and which local hospitals do not; (2) what, if any, oversight mechanisms these hospitals have in place over their hazardous waste disposal service contracts; (3) the sustainability and environmental justice commitments local hospitals have made and how those commitments may conflict with service contracts the hospitals have with medical waste incineration companies that have long histories of environmental violations; and (4) what hospitals intend to do in the immediate future to mitigate the negative effects of their medical waste disposal on Baltimore's communities.
