A COUNCIL RESOLUTION CONCERNING

“There’s a Better Way” to Assist Homeless

FOR the purpose of encouraging the Administration to examine how best to incorporate elements of Albuquerque, New Mexico’s “There’s a Better Way” program to assist homeless individuals with work and support into Baltimore’s efforts to make homelessness a rare and brief experience.

Recitals

Like Baltimore, cities across the United States struggle to address the interrelated problems of providing services and support to homeless individuals and mitigating the safety concerns caused by panhandling on active roads. In Albuquerque, New Mexico, the city is experimenting with an innovative new approach to these concerns that could provide a valuable model to other communities, including Baltimore.

The Albuquerque program, dubbed “There’s a Better Way” by local officials, has 3 main elements. It includes efforts to connect the city’s homeless with care providers and to get commuters and other concerned citizens to donate directly to a coalition of care providers rather than to give money to panhandlers engaging in dangerous collection efforts in traffic. The third, and perhaps most intriguing, element is an effort to provide homeless individuals and panhandlers with opportunities for a day of paid work on beautification projects.

The daywork element involves an employee with a van from a local homeless services organization driving around to areas known to have homeless populations and panhandlers and asking homeless people if they want to work for the day. If they say yes, they are immediately picked up and given lunch in the van, then driven to a beautification project for a 5.5 hour work shift paying $9/hour. At the end of the shift, the participants are driven to a location where numerous shelter, food, and other support services are available and given an opportunity to take advantage of these services if they choose.

“As a mayor, you want to be effective, and you want to do it in a way that’s compassionate. And you also want to do it in a way that really maybe helps people get out of the circumstances

1 that they're in," Albuquerque Mayor Richard Berry said of the program. "We want to give the 2 dignity of work for a day. The dignity of a day's work for a day's pay is a very good thing. It 3 helps people stabilize, it helps them with their self-confidence, and it helps them get back on 4 their feet."

5 The "There's a Better Way" program has only been in place for a few months in 6 Albuquerque, so the data on its effectiveness is limited, but early results are encouraging enough
7 that the city is looking to expand the program to 5 day a week service. This is an innovative 8 approach that deserves more exploration and consideration here in Baltimore. The differences
9 between Albuquerque and Baltimore mean that the program will likely need to be adjusted 10 somewhat to be effective here, but adding something like it to our toolbox, for assisting the 11 homeless, could be invaluable.

12 NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE, That the 13 Council encourages the Administration to examine how best to incorporate elements of 14 Albuquerque, New Mexico's "There's a Better Way" program to assist homeless individuals
